

The Do Not Call program should not be weakened in any way. I understand that NJ's program is more restrictive to telemarketers than the National standards, and may be in jeopardy from the FCC. As it now stands, I am still receiving far too many unsolicited calls from telemarketers, salesmen, survey-takers and others who are either exploiting loopholes in the current laws, or are simply ignoring them with minimal fear of adverse-action. Call Blocking and similar features available by most/all phone companies may help further insulate us from the intrusions of these parasites, but we should not have to pay to protect our privacy. Furthermore, the FCC should NOT in any way try to weaken NJ's current Do Not Call laws, and should rather perhaps take a close look at strengthening the Federal plan to more closely mirror NJ's laws.
